ROYALTY IN VICTORIA PARK.

The Sovereign's Reception by the Plebeians of the East End.

DECLINE OF THE LIBERAL ADMINISTRATION

British Sentiment on the Loss of the Atlantic-Literary, Art and Theatrical Notes by a Herald Correspondent on the Way to Vienna.

LONDON, April 5, 1873. From the present aspect of London you would say that the season was at its height. Only a few years ago it was not considered correct to be seen in town until after Easter; but we have changed all that, and the Prince and Princess of Wales, by whose movements society regulates itself, are too glad to recommence their round of dinners, balls, theatres and other metropolitan delights. Although the Prince takes his share of hunting and oting he is not a sportsman au fond, and as he does not hanker after such matters, his frequent appearance in the hunting field on the moor or in the coverts must be regarded as conciliatory sacrifices to English popular tastes. There is no doubt that the Prince pays much more attention to the cultivation of his reputation among his future subjects than he used to before his lilness, and he reaps his reward in a vastly extended popularity. I notice this in the great difference of his reception by the people in the street or at the theatre. From the time of

THE MORDAUNT DIVORCE CASE SCANDAL until he was prostrated at Sandringham scarcely a hat or a voice was raised to greet or cheer him; now he is welcomed with all the old enthusiasm. Apropos of this question of leyalty a funny story is being told. At the dinner given by the Lord Mayor to the Oxford and Cambridge crews, after the boat race, the stroke of the Cambridge boat, in returning thanks, is reported by the newspapers to have been inaudible. But the real fact is that his words were only too plainly heard. After a few commonplaces he said that he desired to express the great pleasure which he and his fellows felt at the fact that the race was honored by the presence of one whom they all liked-"he This allusion fell like a bombshell among the audience, for "The Coming K-" is the title of a poem, in which the Prince, his associates and his supposed tastes are so vehemently satirized that its publicahad been suppressed. The remark was received with dead silence, and the young man sat down, feeling sorry that he had spoken.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO VICTORIA PARK. Few Americans, however well acquainted with London, know anything about Victoria Park, the spot to which the Queen paid a flying visit on Wedesday morning. It is far away at the East End, beyond Shoreditch and Bethnal Green, and is the one attempt at rurality, the sole place where the fresh turf grows and the green trees wave and the limpid water trickles for the free enjoyment of the poor laboring classes of the East End of London, the Spitalfields weavers, the struggling population of Hackney and Shoreditch. The visit was a decided success. Some disappointment has since been expressed at the rapid rate at which the Queen travelled, which is ascribed by some to prevision on the part of the police authorities, who be so, ne mistake could have been greater. The officials present declare that the reception of the Queen was in every way hearty and enthusiastic, and that the welcome accorded to her by the com-mon people of the East contrasted very favorably with that which she is in the habit of getting from the fashionables of the West End. CABINET INFELICITIES.

There seems to be a general feeling of sorrow mong politicians that the recent crisis did not re sult in the expulsion from office of the present Ministry, not that there is any great feeling about replacing them by any particular set, the one point on which all men are agreed being that the length of time during which the members of the bem irritable and despotic and rendered it most desirable that the cards should be shuffled. Mr. Gladstone seems to me very much changed in appearance since last session. His cheeks were always hollow, and he never had much color, but nis complexion is now of a dull, ashy gray, his face is very wan, his eye has lost its fire, and, instead of that angry, irritable manner which he always showed in debate, and which gave him so much THE APPRARANCE OF A SAVAGE HAWK.

he seems spiritless and depressed. It is rumored that the worst thorn in Mr. Gladstone's side is Mr. Lowe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Lowe's natural bad temper, want of courtesy and great delight in exercising his sharp powers of "snubbing" have given great offence to the heads of various government departments, and in one or two instances there has been almost an open outbreak against Mr. Lowe's decisions and the manner in which they were conveyed. In depress and the Parliament have been trying to instigate the public against Mr. Scudamore, the originator of the government telegraphs, on the ground that he has spent unauthorized sums on the extension of his projects. Mr. Scudamore, howwith a sufficient answer, and the public will find in the trial for perjury of the Tichborne claimant, which comes on in a lew days, a lar mere legitimate object for their excitement.

PROSPECTS OF THE VIENNA FAIR.

The interest about the Vienna Exhibition seems meet sagreat are to a the set of set and set of set at some time while it lasts. The Prince of Wales has made up a party to attend the opening. From all I have learned the American portion of the show, though somewhat late in its arrival, will be more extensive and more interesting than was originally supposed. Dr. Ruppaner one of the American Commissioners speaks very well of the prospects of the United States ex-hibitors. The Doctor, who has been staying for Doctor, who has been staying for the last week at the Langham-that house which is such a very bad imitation of an American hotelis making his way via the Tyrol to his post. Gen-eral Van Buren, the chief United States Commisoner, leaves London to-night and goes through

There is no doubt that the size and ed of the vessels belonging to the White Star speed of the vessels belonging to the and won over vast numbers of persons, who for years had been stannch adherents of other comnies. There were some, however, who felt that confidence in the officers was more desirable than afort in the staterooms, and that no amount of no and electric bells could make up for want of experience or lack of discipline. At this time of the year the America bound ships convey but few saloon passengers, and though f course, the loss of every human life makes its rowful mark in its own immediate circle, and, though the death of every R IRISH OR GERMAN EMIGRANT BREAD-WINNER as disastrous to those he leaves behind as though were in a higher station, the death-roll of the Atlantic contains but few well-known names. One ich, however, is to be found there, that of Mr. Cyrus M. Fisher, an American gentleman who, for verai years, has been practising as a lawver in idon, and who was highly estcemed, not merely by his own countrymen (he acted as a kind of extra but by many Englishmen with whom he had be

In literary circles there is not much stirring. The Examiner, a weekly journal once edited by Leigh Hunt and subsequently by Albany Ponblanque and John Forster, but which has bit by bit lost its tone. is endeavoring to recover its literary status, and is the organ chosen by Mr. Swinburne for the publication from week to week of a series of new nanager of the Times, has returned to work after a long absence, owing to serious illness, which he has passed in Italy. Mr. George Augustus Sala has been for the last ten weeks confined to his bed by a severe attack of acute erysipelas extending from the waist to the feet, which at one time looked very serious. It is hoped, however, that the danger is now passed, and the patient has been removed to the seaside at Hastings, in a state of comparative convalescence. MR. WILKIE COLLINS has at last decided on visiting America next year in a public capacity and giving readings from some of his works. He has concluded an engagement to this effect.

IN THE REALMS OF ART there is a lull, professors beginning to rest after their labors, for this is the week during which works intended for exhibition at the Royal Academy have to be submitted for consideration, and Sunday last was what is known among the initiated as "picture Sunday," when every artist keeps open house and all his acquaintances drop in to see what he proposes to send to the scademy. These brethren of the brush no longer live in high attics in dingy quarters of the town, such as Thackeray loved to depict. Thanks to the mania for picture collections which has of late years been rife among rich Manchester magnates and cotton lords, not merely our leading artists, but men of average capacity realize such prices for their work as enable them to live in comfort. In the suburbs of the great city they John's Wood and Hampstead being greatly affected by them. In the roads thereabout, drawn up before pretty villas, each recognizable at once by its annexe of studio, with its huge "north light" window, as

The owners of these vehicles were inside the houses inspecting the pictures about to be submitted to the consideration of the council of the Royal Academy. As to the composition of that council, and of the manner in which its decisions are given, I purpose to write in a future letter. MATTERS DRAMATIC ARE DULL also, for is it not the season of Lent, and during various other obligations forbidden to be amused? I have, however, come in time to see two plays, the fame of which had reached me on the other side of the water. One of these is "Charles the First," at the Lyceum Theatre, wherein principal character is rendered by Mr. Irving, with a depth and delicacy tenderness and a subtle appreciation of the more refined attributes of the character such as are seldom seen. I was also very much struck by the forcible and perfectly quiet and natural acting of Miss Isabella Bateman as the Queen. 1 had heard it said that in one of her great parts the late Miss O'Neil used to shed real, scalding tears. This feat I saw performed by Miss Bateman, with the result of infection, hankerchiefs being freely used in every part of the house. The other play which I saw was 'Man and Wife," a dramatic version of Mr. Wilkie Collins' novel of that name. It is but a poor piecea skeleton of the original story, with but little in terest, and not hanging closely together. But it is of a few lines, which is not played by some artist of position. When I have spoken of this company York I have been told that most of their plays have been acted at Wallack's and elsewhere, and, it has should like the New Yorkers to see "Man and Wife" with its present cast. So far as I saw, with all their good individual acting, they have no company to match it in their city. EDMUND YATES.

The Challenger was to sail from Bermuda for Sandy Hook on the 20th April, in order to sound two section lines between the Bermudas and the American Continent. The ship will proceed from off Sandy Hook to Halifax, arriving there about the 11th of May. She will leave Halifax for Bermuda about the 18th of May, preparatory to crossing the Atlantic a second time.

The Italian Association of the Italian citizens of New York passed, on Monday last, a resolution to establish an intelligence office for the purpose of estatish an intelligence once to the parapose of procuring work for the Italian immigrants. Those who are in need of laborers can apply at No. 123 White street. This philanthropic resolution will, it is hoped, benefit the Italians in this city who are destitute and without employment.

At half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon an Irishman named John McDermott met with a serious accident on board the ship City of Merida, lying at pier No. 3 North River. He fell from the main deck through the hole, a depth of thirty-five feet. He was so seriously injured that the doctor thought his recovery impossible. The poor man is forty-five years of age and has a family of seven children, besides his wife. To them his death would be a serious blow, because they depend on him mainly for support.

JERSEY'S MACHINE OF DEATH.

Thomas Delany, a brakeman on a Trenton coal train, met with a dreadful accident yesterday at Holmesburg junction, on the Pennsylvania Rail-road, which resulted in his death in about road, which resulted in his death in about fifteen minutes afterwards. It appears that the train on which the unfortunate man rode had to switch off on a side track in order to make room for the half-past twelve train, which was speeding along from Philadelphia. After the switching had been done Delany stepped on to the main track, just in front of the approaching train, and thereby received a tremendous jerk from the locomotive, mashing and lacerating his body in a horrible manner. Deceased, who was a resident of Bordentown, leaves a family. His remains were immediately taken thither for interment.

SALE OF THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD.

Where the Gilbert Elevated Railroad is to be Located-What is Proposed to be Done With the Stock of the Third Avenue Railroad-The Proposed Plan

Certain of Accomplishment. Yesterday the proposals for the purchase of the Third Avenue Railroad by the New York, Boston and Baltimore Railroad Company, on behalf of the Gilbert Elevated Railway, were pushed forward the stockholders of the Third Avenue Railroad have agreed to sell at $165 per share. It is believed by all concerned, not only stockholders of the road, but property owners, that it will be a great saie. Far seeing men have this fact very clearly before them, that somebody will be certain to and the Third Avenue stockholders think it would be better in their hands than in those of other people. It will not interfere with the running of the cars on the present road, as the cars on the elevated road will only stop at every ten blocks. Independent of the way-traffic, as it may be called, it is expected that a large number of passengers will take the horse-cars for the purpose of overtaking the cars on the elevated road at the next depot.

THE VALUATION OF THE THIRD AVENUE ROAD reckoned at about five and a quarter millions. At present the proposal is only under consideration, but great progress towards an ultimate determination has been effected during the last few days, and it is almost certain that the stock-holders of the Third Avenue road will be unanimous when the question is submitted, which it will be shortly, for their final judgment.

LEGISLATIVE POWERS are obtained for this transfer in chapter 885 of the Laws of 1872, in the following clause:—

LEGISLATIVE FOWERS

are obtained for this transfer in chapter 885 of the Laws of 1872, in the following clause:—

Sec. 3.—The corporation hereby created shall possess all the rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to all the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the formation of railroad corporations and to regulate the same," passed April 2, 1850, and the several acts amendatory thereof. except as far as the provisions of the said act are modified by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and the said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to make, construct and maintain an clevated railway, to be operated by the plan known as "Gilbert's improved Elevated Railway," over, through and along streets, avenues, thoroughfares and railways by atmospheric power, compressed air or other power, together with the necessary, sidings, stations, switches, turnouts, platforms, stairways, elevators, air reservoirs and connecting tubes for the transmission of power, telegraph and siynal devices, and all other appliances requisite to convey passengers, mails and merchandise, as contemplated in this act, and in the said aystem of railways over the streets, roads, squares and avenues herein mentioned. The said corporation may make the necessary depois along the route, with the necessary switches, turnouts, conveyances, connections and openings for the proper working and operation of the said railway; and the said streets, avenues, thoroughfares and piaces over, through and along which the said clevated railway may be so constructed, established, maintained and operated shall be ascertained, designated and established by a Board of Commissioners, who shall designate and establish the same, and in such manner as shall, in their judgment, be convenient and upon the said streets, thoroughfares and places in, through and along which the said elevated railway may be

The last section of this clause enables the Third avenue road te locate the Gilbert Elevated road on their line. The work of the latter road is steadily progressing, all the material being daily accumu-lated, and when the powers from the Third Avenue road are obtained, in a few months afterwards work will commence, and the Elevated road will be an accomplished fact, and the difficulty of rapid transit up town will speedily be a thing of the past.

LUIGI LUSIGNANI.

Preparations for the Execution of the Italian Wife Murderer at Morristown, N. J .-Remarkable Coolness and Unconcern of the Prisoner.

On the 1st of May the last penalty of the law is to be meted out at this place to Luigi Lusignani, the Italian wife murderer. The case is one of peculiar interest from the fact that this will be the first Italian ever executed in this county, and that the crime, like most Italian crimes, had its origin in ealousy. Little more than two years ago Lusignani was a happy peasant boy in his own sunny land, but allured by the reports which came from relations and friends of the opulence that his countrymen were enjoying in the United States, he left his home and friends and came to this country. When he landed the visions of wealth which he had indulged in were rudely dispelled, and after a few weeks spent in idleness he was forced to join the banditti of the street sweeping department in New York, and became a scavenger. He took up his abode in the chosen haunt of Italia's sons, Bax-HE MET HIS FATE in the person of a swarthy, dark-haired Italian girl named Johanna Moosi. Luigi's heart was young and susceptible; he loved Johanna, and in a short time, anhappily for Luigi, the couple were married by an Italian priest in Hoooken, and they went to live together at 18 Baxter street.

For a short time the couple lived happily, but not long had elapsed before Johanna commenced to develop qualities which were not at all agreeable to her husband. She was somewhat addicted to the use of beer, and was rather fond of frequenting the Italian wine shops of the Sixth ward. From this she took to going into the society of strange men, and Luigi very naturally remonstrated against such breaches of matrimo nial faith. But Johanna would not be remonstrated with and persisted in her unwise course. Frequent quarrels were the result, which sometimes terminated in blows, Luigi generally coming out second best. In order if possible to RECLAIM HIS WIFE Luigi determined to change his place of residence; but Johanna refused to leave Baxter street, and her husband had recourse to a ruse which was the cause of a final separation. He took apartments in the upper part of the city, and, unknown to Johanna, had her effects removed there. When the woman discovered this she was furious, and demanded her effects back. Luigi entreated her to come to him and live in peace, but she would not. and he refused to deliver up her clothes. A few days after this occurrence Johanna suddenly disappeared, and for some months all the efforts of Luigi to trace her proved utterly unavailing; but peared, and for some months all the efforts of Luigi to trace her proved utterly unavailing; but in the menth of October he heard she was living at Dover, N. J., with a countryman of her own, in the capacity of housekeeper. Luigi dearly loved the woman, with all ner faults, and he determined, if possible, to regain her affections, in company with another Italian, Philip Massalini, he left on the early train one morning for Dover and easily succeeded in finding the place where the woman was living with her paramour. He tells the story of what he asserts happened afterwards. The man, with whom the woman lived, a shocmaker by trade, kept a small shoe shop, in which he was seated at work when Luigi and his friend made their appearance. Inquiries were made by Luigi about his wife, and he was answered by THE woman in From. The meeting between the two was not by any means friendly, the woman instantly commencing to upbraid her husband, charging him with having been cruel to her and robbing her of her effects. Luigi endeavored to soothe her, and, wishing to make the conversation more private, he suggested that they should adjourn to the sidewalk, the house not affording a private apartment. They did so, and after talking some minutes went back again into the house, where some hot words ensued. At this moment, Luigi asserts, the woman grasped a butcher-knife with which she was cutting neat, and stabbed him in the abdomen, while he was at the same time struck with a shoemaker's knife behind the ear. To seize the knife from Jehannawas but the work of a moment, and enraged and excited with pain and jealousy.

HIS HOT SOUTHERN BLOOD WAS RAISED Jealousy,

HIS HOT SOUTHERN BLOOD WAS RAISED to an ungovernable degree, and a deadly wound was inflicted upon the unfortunate woman, which caused her life blood to trickle upon the floor. Luigi then closed in a flerce encounter with the shoemaker, during which the latter was severely stabled. Luigi went down to the startled villagers gathered around the dead body of the woman, which lay upon the door step.

Luigi was tried at the November term of the Court at Morristown, and, though it was proven that to the crime of adultery Johanna had added bigamy, and married her paramour, who was shown to be a man of notoriously bad character in his own land, the jury brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree. The prisoner's devoted without recompense or reward, succeeded in having a short stay granted before sentence was pronounced, and a motion was made for a new trial on the ground of various irregularities. The motion was refused by Judge Dairymple, and on the lat day of April the last sentence of the law was directed to be carried inte effect upon the 1st day directed to be carried inte effect upon the 1st day nounced, and a motion was made for a new trial on the ground of various irregularities. The motion was refused by Judge Dalrymple, and on the lat day of April the last sentence of the law was directed to be carried into effect upon the 1st day of May. The prisoner manifested

No EMOTION WHEN SENTENCE WAS PASSED upon him, merely exclaiming in his broken English, as he was led away, "Me poor men: me no fair trial." An effort was made after sentence was passed to have the sentence commuted, and application was made to the Court of Pardons, but the application was refused, although the public sentiment of Morristown was almost unanimously in lavor of a commutation of sentence.

A reporter of the Herald on yesterday visited the prisoner in his cell in the County Jail. Luigi Lusignam, who is a slight, delicate man, only twenty-three years old, has not changed in appearance since his trial, and seemed to be in wenderfully good spirits. In answer to a question of the reporter as to how he felt he shrugged his shoulders in an expressive way and said, "Me feel very good; no good to be sorry."

The reporter inquired if he was not afraid to die; and he said in reply:—"No; die once, all over," at the same time pointing to the prison yard, where the preparations for the execution have aiready commenced.

On being ssked was he sorry for myself, yes. I told trut about what happened; but me poor, no money; thought to get five years, ten years; but no, they hang me. Well, it is all right."

The Italian went on talking for some time in this strain, and he then gave the reporter some particulars of his life. It seems that he was at one time a soldier under Garibaidi, and his slight frame quivered with excitement as he speke of the battles he had assisted at under his great leader. He will sometimes break out into one of the patriotic songs of Italy, and, as he has a rich musical voice, the prisoners in the outer cells gather around to listen. Luigi is finely educated, and he reads a good deal in religious books in his own language received an application from George F. Wunts. one of Lusignani's counsel, praying for a respite of the death sentence passed on the culprit at the Morris County Court of Oyer and Terminer on the 20th of February last. In this last petition a stay of two weeks was solicited. Governor Parker refused to interfere with the sentence of the Court for the following reasons:—

On the 20th of February last the culprit was found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged on the 1st of May. On an application for a new trial the verdict was sustained. The Court of Pardons, after a careful examination of the evidence and full consideration of the circumstances, unanimously refused to commute the sentence. Nearly six months have elapsed since the commission of the crime for which he is condemned. While I sympathize with the friends of the prisoner and regret his fate, still, as a public officer, I have a duty to perform which, in the absence of any good reasons for extending the time fixed by the Court for execution requires, that I deny the application for reprieve.

A MASSACHUSETTS MURDERER.

SPRINGFIELD, April 22, 1873. The trial of Albert H. Smith for the murder of Charles H. Sackett at Westfield on the 20th of November last, commenced before the Supreme Court in this city to-day. A Jury was empaneled without difficulty, and the testimony for the prosecution is now being put in. The court room is crowded.

A MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

The Inquest in the Case of Mary Fagan, Who Was Beaten to Death-Important Testimony.
Toe murder of Mary Pagan, the poor woman who was beaten to death some five weeks ago, is still shrouded in mystery. Coroner Young held the inquest at the Twentieth precinct police station, Thirty-seventh street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, yesterday. The inquest has been delayed because the principal witness, Mathew Morri-, who was supposed to be the murderer, lay sick at Bellevue Hospital. Morrison is dead now, and his wife, at the inquest yesterday, seemed unwilling to unravel the mystery. The facts were published in the HERALD at the time the murder was discovered. Mary Fagan was a very poor woman, a drunkard, too, and on the night of 16th of March sought shelter in the house, or rather in the rooms, of Morrison, 515 West Thirty-eighth street. She was an old acquaintance of Mrs. Morrison, and the latter allowed her to stay for the street. She was an old acquaintance of Mrs. Morrison, and the latter allowed her to stay for the night. On the lollowing day Mary Fagan was found dead in the room in which she had siept. She was terribly bruised, most of her ribs being broken and the jagged ends of the ribs on the right side having penetrated the right long and liver, had lacerated both organs in a terrible manner.

The first witness examined yesterday was Mrs. Jane Morrison, who is a short, stout woman, with a rather shrewd face. Sne testified that she did not know what Mary Fagan died of; she did not know what Mary Fagan died of; she did not know what Mary Fagan died of; she did not know where she got the terrible beating; she had known Mary Fagan five years; there had been no trouble that afternoon or evening; she did not know whether her boy, Hamilton (who is supposed to know everything about the case, but has all of a sudden disappeared), slept in the place that night; she protested she knew absolutely nothing about the murder. She identified a smeething-iron, which was icound in the room stained with blood, as her own, but said she did not know who could have taken it out of the closet.

Mrs. Eliza Crosby, who lived with the Morrison family, testified she was drunk that particular evening, and that she remembered seeing the boy, Hamilton, in the house between seves and eight o'clock in the evening.

Mrs. Farley, who occupied the adjeining room, testified that Morrison got to beating she took it very quietly; she had frequently seen both with black eyes; when Mrs. Morrison got a beating she took it very quietly; she had frequently seen both with black eyes; when Mrs. Morrison got a beating she took it.

The most important witness was Mrs. Garrity, who lived in the same house. She testified that she heard a quarrel between them; she heard Morrison had beaten her to death.

The jury retired and brought in the following verdict:—"We believe that Mary Fagan died from injuries received at the hands of Mathew Morrison, and that Jane Morrison was

THE NEW CHARTER.

Office Seekers Still on the Lookout at Combination Getting Fixed-What is Thought of the Proposed Supplementary Chapter Bill.

"The cry is still they come" at the Mayor's office. Yesterday the office-seekers came, not in single files, but in battalions. The more notable of the callers were Thurlow Weed and Colonel Stebbins, ooth of whom had short interviews with His Honor. The main topic of yesterday's gossip around the Hall was THE RENOWNED SUPPLEMENTARY BILL, said to be contemplated being brought before the Legislature directly the charter is signed, and which proposes to return to the provisions charter of 1856, by which the office which proposes to return to the provisions of the charter of 1856, by which the office of Comptroller was made elective instead of by appointment of the Mayor as under the present and the new charter. Various opinions were expressed as to the chances of the ultimate success of such a measure, but the majority seemed to think that there was very little chance of any proposal in this direction becoming law. Those who favor a combination in the Board of Aldermen as to

Were slightly strengthened yesterday, and it was said, with some show of truthfulness, that the Aldermanic combination has been formed which will control the appointments. Mayor Havemeyer is believed to be too shrewd and too good a manager to be defeated in his purposes by any combination of this kind. The Mayor will, when the proper time comes, take into his confidence certain prominent city officials and the more valuable men of the Board of Aldermen, and in a private conference, or perhaps in several conferences, will go over his list of nominations, and in this council the final list will be drafted and then sent to the Board of Aldermen for confirmation, and it is not anticipated that there will then be any difficulty in the mention of any names with particular appointments would certainly be the merest speculation, and it may safely be taken for granted that all names thus mentioned for the next few days are only suggested by the wish that is father to the thought.
